Dear Ms Simon:

I am concerned about repression of immigrants.

Travel and immigration contribute immeasurably to society. There are the economic benefits running from the silk road of history to the modern fact that immigrants start more companies. There is the demographic benefit of older people retiring to younger societies and vice versa. There is the public safety fact that newcomers are less likely to fall into criminal behavior. There is the simple pleasure of having around us a wide range of foods, styles and ideas.

The incoming administration campaigned by stoking fears of foreigners and is led by sadistic racists who delight in attacking those least able to defend themselves. What little power the Democratic party retains in Washington was disgustingly abdicated last week as dozens voted to subject immigrants to Draconian penalties for petty crimes while all penalties were being dropped for thousands of violent non-immigrant criminals.

Thank you for opposing the Laken Riley Act.

My pride in the US derives partly from our pluralism.

Sincerely,
Eric Babson
